Write the critical appreciation of the poem Gray's 'Elogy written in Country Churchyard'.

Ans. The revolutionary generation were willing enough to admit that society today is full of waste, and frustration - but tomorrow this all to be remedied - on earth.

Gray has perfectly good reason of writing as they did and were expressing a hope, that is also a perpetually recurrent
part of human experience. The Romantics, besides, were not to be faced with Gray's

difficult' dilemma of thought.
The romantic liberals in next generation has equally good reason for writing as they did, and were expressing a hope that is also ~~perfectly~~
perpetually recurrent
part of human experience.

The Romantic, besides
were not to be faced with Gray's difficulty
in personal expression.
The barriers to ~~emotions~~ communication are,
cast down, emotion
pours itself ~~perfectly~~ unrestrained and
undisguised; it had no longer to be submitted to the
elaborate process of
absorption and trans-
mutation to which —

subjected it.

Gray writes.

To each his suffering all
are men,
condemned alike to groan
while Shelly can.

I could weep down like
a tired child

And weep away this life of care.

— often with some loss
of dignity given by reticence, but as with a corresponding gain of ~~wisdom~~ immediacy.

The poet has become not a reflective literary person speaking to other reflective literary persons but a man speaking to man.
